Coun. Clark admits licence suspension

Apology. Rideau-Rockcliffe rep punished after roadside breath test on his way back from The Playmate

ALEX BOUTILIER
alex.boutilier@metronews.ca

Peter Clark apologized to council and his constituents Tuesday after it was revealed he lost his licence for three days after a breathalyzer test on the way back from a Vanier strip club.

The Rideau-Rockcliffe councillor said he was returning from a Montreal Road strip club — The Playmate — on May 7, pumping his breaks to control his speed.

"And the (officer) thought that was erratic, so he pulled me over. And ... he pulled me over and he asked if I had a drink, and I say 'Yes,'" Clark said Tuesday evening.

Clark "blew a warning" — registering between 0.05 and the legal limit of 0.08 — and had his licence suspended for three days.

The veteran councillor said he was pulled over because the officer thought he was trying to pick up a prostitute.

"He said he pulled me over because he thought I was trying to pick up a hooker. Well, No. 1, I didn't stop, I didn't open the window, I didn't wave at anybody — I don't know where he got that impression," Clark said.

Clark said he was returning with a friend from a doubles bridge game at a Gatineau seniors centre that night. His friend suggested they stop at The Playmate strip club, and he did. According to the councillor, he drank about a half a bottle of red wine over approximately one hour before the two parted ways and he drove home.

When he was pulled over, Clark said the officer thought he was critical of the police, and the councillor said he considers himself a friend of the Ottawa Police Service.

"And then it got to be 'Friend of the police chief? Excuse me?' and I didn't say that. And I don't know where he got it from," the councillor said.

Clark paid an administrative fee of $150 to get his licence back three days later.

In a statement to councillors Tuesday, Clark said he deeply regrets his behaviour and apologizes to constituents and council.

One regret

"We need to score more goals": Sens GM Bryan Murray

Ottawa Senators general manager Bryan Murray believes his team is poised to become a competitive force in the Eastern Conference and he's willing to make the moves to ensure that happens.

He reflected on the lockout-shortened campaign at a season-ending news conference in Ottawa on Tuesday and said while he was pleased with the team's overall success, he did have one regret.

"The only disappointing part of the whole year was that we could never find out how good we really were," Murray said.

The Senators finished seventh in the Eastern Conference despite a rash of devastating injuries to key players and advanced to the second round of the playoffs before losing to the Pittsburgh Penguins in five games.

The second-round loss magnified some of the team's needs and Murray plans on addressing them during the off-season.

"We need to score more goals," said Murray. "We have to find a way to create a little more offence and that may mean trying to find a player out there that will do that.

"But part of it also will be counting on a couple of the younger players that showed they can play in the league to step up and do a little more with the puck than they were capable of or able to do this year."

Murray added he would consider packaging some of those young prospects in order to find the right player. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Seeking justice. Stabbing victim's family looking for harsher charges

The family of Michael Wassill wants the Crown to ask for a more severe charge against the man accused of slashing Wassill's throat in light of his recent death in hospital.

"The family is hoping the Crown seeks the most serious charge of first-degree murder," said Wassill's uncle, Paul Champ, on Tuesday.

Champ sat in the gallery as the accused, Carson Morin, 20, appeared before a judge via video link Tuesday from a regional detention centre.

Wassill, 20, suffered irreversible brain damage as a result of his injuries and was in a coma until he died on May 23.

Champ alleged the attack was premeditated and said it warrants a charge of first-degree murder.

The uncle has been acting as spokesperson since his nephew was stabbed. JOE LOFARO/METRO

Long-term tenant sought. Ottawa's AA baseball pitch falls through

Ottawa city staff recommend opening the Ottawa Stadium for community use this summer while they seek a new long-term tenant for the vacant facility.

A report that goes to the finance and economic development committee June 4 calls for a new request for offers (RFO) with a "broader scope" after attempts to land a professional baseball team fell through.

"I want to thank city staff, Beacon Capital Sports Partners, and Joe McEacharn and the Eastern League for their hard work on this challenging file," Mayor Jim Watson said in a release Tuesday evening.

The report suggests issuing the RFO package in late June, with a deadline for submissions in August. Staff would report back to council in October, and try to execute an agreement in November. STEVE COLLINS/FOR METRO

An array of buildings take part in Doors Open Ottawa

Take a look. Get a glimpse of 124 buildings on display this Saturday and Sunday

GRAHAM LANKTREE
graham.lanktree@metronews.ca

New additions will be part of the big reveal at Doors Open Ottawa this year, including a behind-the-scenes look at the movie magic of the Mayfair Theatre and how collector coins are made at the Royal Canadian Mint.

The festival, which brought 80,000 people in 2012 to see areas usually closed off in public and private buildings, will be opening 14 new sites this Saturday and Sunday.

"I always felt that the Mayfair on the outside is just a big boring brick building, but that if you saw it on the inside, you wouldn't want to go to any other theatre," said the Mayfair's owner Lee Demarbre who will be opening the projection room and showing movie paraphernalia to the public.

Built in 1932, the Mayfair is Ottawa's only standing pre-war cinema and is filled with curious items including a life-sized alien from Ridley Scott's 1979 film of the same name, Star Wars' Han Solo frozen in carbonite, and a flux capacitor from Back to the Future.

The theatre is just one of the 124 sites families can visit.

"I'm really excited about the Royal Canadian Mint. That building does stand out," said Marcelle Kimberley, a cultural planner with the City of Ottawa working to co-ordinate Doors Open.

The building has more than $1 billion worth of precious metals in its vaults and focuses on producing collectors coins and gold bullion. Visitors won't see much more than what they would on a regular tour, but admission will be free, said Alex Reeves, a spokesperson for the mint.

Hutt first-degree murder trial. Disturbing message discovered in notebook close to where police say Jones was scalded by husband

joe.lofaro@metronews.ca

Ottawa police found the message "Your a terrible wife. See you in hell" scrawled in a notebook in Donna Jones' home, a forensic investigator testified Tuesday at the first-degree-murder trial of her husband, Mark Hutt.

Sgt. Stephen Jones told a jury the notebook was found in a drawer next to where Donna would have been crouching down the day she was scalded with boiling water.

The Crown alleges Hutt scalded his wife with a large pot of boiling water on Nov. 24, 2009, and left her to die 11 days later in their basement on Barwell Avenue.

The notebook message marked a striking contrast to one of the "hundreds" of love notes and apology notes Sgt. Mike Hudson said the couple exchanged.

Defence lawyer Lorne Goldstein said in cross-examination police recovered "10 bankers' boxes" full of notes from the home.

In one undated note entered as evidence Tuesday, Hutt apologized to Donna for reasons unknown.

"I once again must apologize for my actions last night. I must have something wrong with me chemically," the letter reads. "Honestly that scares me. I don't like the fact that I can't be in control of my emotions (anger)."

"I love you with all my heart regardless to what you think. YOU ARE MY ANGEL," he wrote.

The trial resumes Wednesday.

Ottawa Fire Services received a 911 call just after 12:30 a.m. Tuesday, reporting smoke in the area of Pinecrest and Richmond Road.

The fire was quickly extinguished, with damages estimated in the $5,000 range. Two people were displaced as a result of the fire. METRO

Glebe's Central Park. $120,000 revamp approved

The city's planning committee gave the go-ahead Tuesday to a new playground and meeting place in Central Park, near Bank Street on the north side of the Glebe.

The Exploration Garden is to feature balance beams, a fossil dig, log seating and a sand play area, all enclosed by a bamboo fence. It's expected to cost $120,000.

"The goal of the garden is to provide a quiet place to rest along Bank Street and to provide an innovative and interesting place for children to play and learn," said a city report on the project.

Central Park was one of the first projects completed in the early 20th century by the Ottawa Improvement Commission, which was later replaced by the National Capital Commission. It is considered historically significant, and requires a heritage permit for the alterations.

The committee recommended granting a two-year permit and giving city staff the authority to approve minor design changes. The plan, which passed unanimously without any debate from council or delegations from the public, goes to city council June 12.

Senate sending Duffy's claims to RCMP for review

Expense scandal. From 2011-12, Sen. Mike Duffy asked for Ottawa-based living expenses for 49 days when he wasn't there

Senate officials confirmed they have found a troubling pattern of Sen. Mike Duffy improperly claiming living expenses, including several days in 2011 when he was campaigning across the country for the Conservatives.

Senators meeting at a committee late Tuesday voted to send the matter of Duffy's expenses to the RCMP, after hearing the new information.

Senate finance officials detailed how Duffy made claims for living expenses for his Ottawa home, while he was elsewhere in the country.

Duffy did not attend the committee meeting.

The Canadian Press first reported two weeks ago that Duffy had said he was on Senate business while campaigning with Conservative candidates. Shortly afterward, Duffy resigned from the Tory caucus.

But it wasn't until the latest report was tabled Tuesday night that an account was given on the days Duffy was claiming expenses.

During the 2011 election, Duffy asked for Ottawa-based living expenses on seven separate days when he was out of town. In total, in 2011 and 2012, Duffy made claims on 49 days he was not in Ottawa.

"It represents a pattern that raises concerns," the report says.

An independent audit by the firm Deloitte had raised the possibility that Duffy had been claiming expenses while not in Ottawa, but underlined that the senator had not provided them with adequate documentation and never met with auditors.

But the Conservatives in the Senate declared the matter closed shortly after receiving the audit, pointing to the fact that Duffy had repaid the $90,000 in living expenses.

The matter blew open again, however, when it was revealed that the $90,000 bill was actually paid with the help of the prime minister's then chief of staff Nigel Wright.

New twists in Toronto mayor crack scandal

The controversy around an alleged video appearing to show the mayor of Toronto smoking crack cocaine showed no signs of diminishing Tuesday as the leader of Canada's largest city sidestepped questions about a new twist in the scandal.

Israel could strike Russia-Syria missile shipment

Hardline warning. Government fears weapons could fall into hands of militant groups

Israel's defence chief said Tuesday a Russian plan to supply sophisticated anti-aircraft missiles to Syria was a "threat" and signalled that Israel is prepared to use force to stop the delivery.

The warning by Defence Minister Moshe Yaalon ratcheted up tensions with Moscow over the planned sale of S-300 air-defence missiles to Syria. Earlier in the day, a top Russian official said his government remained committed to the deal.

Israel has been lobbying Moscow to halt the sale, fearing the missiles would upset the balance of power in the region and could slip into the hands of hostile groups, including the Lebanese militia Hezbollah, a close ally of the Syrian regime.

Israel has carried out several airstrikes in Syria in recent months that are believed to have destroyed weapons shipments bound for Hezbollah. The government has not confirmed carrying out the attacks.

The delivery of the Russian missiles to Syria could limit the Israeli air force's ability to act.

Eastern China. Firefighters rescue newborn baby lodged in sewer pipe

Chinese firefighters have rescued a newborn boy from a sewer pipe below a squat toilet, sawing out an L-shaped section and then delicately dismantling it to free the cocooned baby, who greeted the rescuers with cries.

A tenant heard the baby's sounds in the public restroom of a residential building in Zhejiang province in eastern China on Saturday and notified authorities, according to the state-run news site Zhejiang News. A video of the two-hour rescue that followed was broadcast widely on Chinese news programs and websites late Monday and Tuesday.

The child — named Baby No. 59 from the number of his hospital incubator — was reported safe in a nearby hospital, and news of the rescue prompted an outpouring from strangers who came to the hospital with diapers, baby clothes, powdered milk and offers to adopt the child.

Police are treating the case as an attempted homicide, and are looking for the mother and anyone else involved in the incident.

The landlord of the building in Pujiang county told Zhejiang News that it was unlikely the birth took place in the toilet room because there was no evidence of blood and she was not aware of any recent pregnancies among her tenants.

The CEO of fashion retailer H&M speaks to Metro about pricey brands and Bangladeshi factory workers

THE BUSINESS OF CHEAP CHIC

ELISABETH BRAW
Metro World News in Stockholm

Life is going swimmingly for Karl-Johan Persson, H&M's young, handsome CEO — despite the global recession, the cheap-chic chain is doing well. But the recent collapse of a garment factory building in Bangladesh has put H&M in the spotlight, even though the retailer didn't use the factories. Persson talks with Metro in an exclusive interview at H&M's headquarters in Stockholm.

Has the recession harmed H&M or has it instead benefitted you because people have turned to cheaper clothes?
When the whole apparel market diminishes it affects H&M as well, but at the same time I think more people discover H&M in times like these because they start questioning their clothing purchases. People want a good look with a good quality for a low price, and that's what H&M offers.

Last month a clothing factory collapsed and killed over 1,000 workers. Now H&M, the biggest manufacturer of clothes in Bangladesh, has signed an agreement where you agree to help your Bangladeshi suppliers pay for safety measures. Are the factories safe now?
The factory collapse was horrific, but our code of conduct bans use of factories in residential areas, so this was not an H&M supplier. But we've been working to improve conditions in Bangladesh for a long time. The major change with the agreement is that we join up with other buyers, with trade unions and with the government.

But isn't the problem that people want cheap clothes? Then it never makes sense for a company to use better factories.
Yes, but it's a common misperception that cheap brands use certain manufacturers and expensive brands use others. We're one of 30 to 40 companies buying from many of our suppliers. The workers' pay is the same regardless of which company is buying. What's interesting is not the price of the clothing item but what the company does. Don't look at the prices. Maybe I sound cocky, but I dare promise that no apparel company in the whole world does as much as H&M.

Quoted

"If you spot our top for $15 and one elsewhere for $150, people will think, 'These workers are much better paid.' But their pay is the same."
Karl-Johan Persson, CEO of retailer H&M

What does that look like for factory workers?
We've signed the new plan for building and fire safety in Bangladesh. And we demand that workers are paid the wages they should have. We're also involved in a social dialogue and educate workers about their rights. And we try to influence decision-makers. Recently I spoke with the Bangladeshi prime minister (Sheikh Hasina) about increasing the minimum wage.

CRACK SUMMER'S TO-DO LIST

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

If reading about Rob Ford has got you down, welcome to the Island of Sunny Sentiments, where the only thing we're thinking about today is where to go on our summer vacation.

In this, we're not alone. Across Canada, 5.2 million school kids are gazing out the window wondering the same thing.

Good idea, you're thinking. Anything beats another chapter of Ford Follies. Just one problem: Too many choices. Once again, you've come to the right place. I'm an expert on Canadian getaways, having got to all of them except Newfoundland, which is always a bit out of reach.

To get you started, here are my top five Canadian summer vacation choices (in no particular order). Feel free to chime in anytime with your own. And don't forget to bring the beer.

Moraine Lake: Just 12.5 kilometres up (or is that down?) the road from its more famous sister Lake Louise in the Alberta Rockies, Moraine is a jaw-dropping postcard-perfect lake surrounded by 10 majestic, snow-capped peaks. It is so jaw-dropping, it was once featured on the back of the $20 bill, back when cash was cash and not plastic scented with a whiff of maple syrup.

Louisbourg: Parks Canada lists 167 National Historic Sites on its website. I haven't been to all 167, but the coolest I have been to is Louisbourg, the French fort on Cape Breton Island. The road to the fort is often shrouded in fog, so it's like travelling into the Twilight Zone to emerge 300 years in the past. In fact, this is Louisbourg's 300th birthday. Everything including the dinner menu is an authentic replica of the days before bilingualism when New France was more than a plank in Pauline Marois' platform. Actors recreate daily life in the fort and you're so swept away you forget to check your smartphone.

The Beach: Every province has one or more than one legendary strip of sand: Wasaga, Cavendish, Grand, Rathtrevor, Balmy, Winnipeg, Regina, and the mother of all beaches: Long Beach in Tofino and Ucluelet. Really long: 25 kilometres from one end of Radar to the other end of Wickaninnish. It's hard to single out a favourite, but I'm determined to spend the rest of my days trying.

Niagara-on-the-Lake: The classic tourist trap, but so what? It's a miracle this bucolic place still exists, so close to ... you know. Everyone here conspires to lighten your wallet, but unlike the Canada Revenue Agency and the cable company, they make you happy to oblige. Goes with other places that feature fudge: Niagara Falls, Granville Island, Banff, Lunenburg, etc.

The cottage: I grew up in one. My job was to haul water from a nearby artesian well and gather kindling for the fireplace. Now "the cottage" often sports a three-car garage and an indoor pool. But it's essentially the same idea. Go someplace simple and stay there until you feel better. And don't forget to bring the bacon.

The Robin Hood mentality is often a thief sleight of hand

Now You See Me. The latest altruistic bank heist film is breaking into theatres this weekend, but it's not the first movie to have been there

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Now You See Me starts giving back to audiences this weekend. HANDOUT

In just 12 minutes The Great Train Robbery tells the tale of a group of bandits who hold up a train and rob the passengers.

Made by Edwin Porter in 1903 it's been placed on the United States National Film Registry for its innovative use of composite editing, camera movement and on-location shooting.

It was one of the first narrative movies and it introduced moviegoers to the heist movie, a tradition that continues to this day.

This weekend Now You See Me presents an elaborate crime story of a team of magicians — led by Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson and Isla Fisher — who abracadabra their way into bank vaults.

They are Robin Hood-style crooks, stealing money and giving it back to their audiences.

The "steal from the rich to give to the poor" is a common theme in heist movies. Recently Tower Heist saw a rag tag group clean out a Bernie Madoff type in order to refund money to the people he swindled.

The Maiden Heist stars Christopher Walken as a museum security guard infatuated with the painting that gives the movie its name.

When it is announced that the artwork has been sold to a Danish gallery he's distraught — "Do you know how far away Copenhagen is?"— and ropes Morgan Freeman and William H. Macy into stealing the painting and two others so they can enjoy them together. Not exactly Robin Hood — they're stealing from the rich to give to themselves — but their motives are artistically pure.

Not so pure are the reasons behind the heist in The Good, the Bad, the Weird — an Asian take on the similarly named Sergio Leone spaghetti western.

It's a chaotic two-hour chase for a treasure map — and then the treasure — in 1930s wartime Manchuria between a bounty hunter (the Good, played by Jung Woo-sung), a leader of evil bandits (the Bad, Lee Byung-hun) and a train robber (the Weird, Song Kang-ho).

Director Ji-woon Kim calls this a "kimchee western," after the national dish of Korea because the plot and film, like the people of Korea, he says, are spicy and vibrant.

The Good, the Bad, the Weird has a few laughs but A Fish Called Wanda's story of armed robbery is a full-on comedy crime caper.

It has a 96 per cent rating on Rotten Tomatoes and was named one of the greatest British films of all time by Total Film.

Heist ethics

They are Robin Hood-style crooks, stealing money and giving it back to their audiences. The "steal form the rich to give to the poor" is a common theme in heist movies.

Bieber's reckless driving disturbing neighbourhood

Justin Bieber is getting on his neighbours' nerves once again, and this time it's because he won't slow down near his home.

The Canadian pop star was visited by the L.A. County Sheriff's Department in response to complaints about his reckless driving on the streets around his home, according to E! News. Police reportedly received numerous calls about the singer's driving on Monday alone, with many complaining that his speeding endangers the lives of neighborhood children playing outside.

Did Katy Perry nudge Pattinson away from Stewart?

It looks like Katy Perry might have been behind Robert Pattinson's decision to call it quits with Kristen Stewart, according to Life & Style.

Perry, a pal of Pattinson's, reportedly told the Twilight star that he deserved better than Stewart after her affair with director Rupert Sanders came to light last summer.

"Katy never really supported Rob's decision to get back with Kristen. She always said they wouldn't last," a source says. "Katy told Rob she didn't think their relationship could withstand the cheating scandal. And he deserved better than someone who would destroy a family (like Rupert's.)"

Since his breakup, Pattinson has been spotted out and about with Perry in New York and in Santa Barbara, where the pair hung out at a hotel and spied on a wedding rehearsal, according to People magazine.

"They just sat together and watched," a source says. "They were not affiliated with the wedding party and were not seen mingling with guests."

Amanda Bynes' must-read Twitter account

Apparently Amanda Bynes has even more to say about her arrest last week for drug possession and reckless endangerment.

"I'm so offended by all of this but so proud to not be a drug or alcohol user. I'm suing NYPD for illegally entering my apartment, lying about drugs on me and lying about me tampering with non existent drug paraphernalia," she posted to Twitter over Memorial Day weekend. "Then I'm suing for being put into a mental hospital against my will, then locked up overnight for coming home after a facial and working out with my trainer like the good girl that I am." Bynes is also looking to the future, with a possible new career in the works: "I'm getting in shape and getting a nose job," she posted. "I'm looking forward to a long and wonderful career as a singer/rapper."

Ooh la la worthy French Toast

French toast is synonymous with breakfast or brunch and this warm weather version is a must try.

With its three golden slices of egg loaf topped with caramelized bananas and sliced strawberries finished with maple cream sauté, it's simply delicious.

Ingredients

- 1 1/2 cups (360 ml) 35% Cream
- 1 egg
- 1 tsp (5 ml) cinnamon
- 1 tsp (5 ml) nutmeg
- 1 tsp (5 ml) allspice
- 12 egg bread slices
- 1 banana, thinly sliced
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) brown sugar
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) pure maple syrup
- 5 strawberries, thinly sliced
- Icing sugar, for dusting

1. To make French toast batter: Combine 1 cup of the cream, egg and spices in stainless steel bowl. Whisk thoroughly until smooth.

2. Dip each slice of egg bread for about 5 seconds in batter, then place immediately on lightly oiled griddle on medium heat.

3. Cook for approx. 2 minutes, then flip over and continue cooking until both sides are golden brown.

4. To make sauce: toss banana and brown sugar together in bowl. Add to small pan on medium heat with a small amount of butter. Cook until sugar begins to melt and bananas are a nice golden colour.

5. Reduce heat to low and add maple syrup. Keep the pan moving to ensure sugars don't burn.

6. Once syrup is bubbling, remove pan from heat and add remaining 1/2 cup of cream. Lightly stir until all ingredients come together. Keep warm.

7. Place 3 pieces of French toast on a plate and top with generous amount of sauce. Garnish with sliced strawberries and dust with icing sugar.

Breakfast. Skillet Garden Eggs with Fontina Cheese

Serve breakfast inspired by a walk through the garden.

This recipe began with the idea of egg-in-a-hat — sometimes called egg-in-a-basket or a Popeye — in which an egg is cracked into a hole cut in the centre of a slice of bread.

The whole thing is pan-fried, usually just until the white is set and the yolk remains liquid.

The idea is that as you eat it, the yolk breaks and soaks the toast with a warm, creamy sauce.

Instead of toast, use the same idea with a bed of vegetables by sautéing a vegetable hash, then nestling eggs into the centre of it. To amp the flavour, toss in some prosciutto and cheese. The result is not only beautiful, but also healthy and satisfying.

Ingredients

- 1 tbsp olive oil
- 2 slices prosciutto, chopped
- 1 small red onion, chopped
- 2 cups chopped Swiss chard
- 1/2 small zucchini, finely chopped
- 1/2 cup halved cherry or grape tomatoes
- Salt and ground black pepper
- 4 eggs
- 1/2 cup grated fontina cheese

1. In a large nonstick skillet over medium, heat the olive oil. Add the prosciutto and onion and sauté until the onion is tender, about 5 minutes. Add the Swiss chard and zucchini and cook for another 5 to 6 minutes, or until the vegetables are tender and beginning to brown.

2. Add the tomatoes and season with salt and pepper. Stir well, then arrange the vegetables in an even layer. Using a spoon, create 4 wells in the vegetables, each about 2 inches across. Crack an egg into each well. Cover the skillet and cook until just shy of desired doneness, about 3 to 4 minutes.

3. Sprinkle the cheese over the vegetables and eggs, then cover and cook for another minute. Use a spatula to transfer half of the vegetables and 2 eggs onto each plate. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Disconnect from your desk at day-end

At the end of last year, the number of smartphones used around the world reached a colossal one billion. And by 2015, experts predict that this number will double. For businesses, the perks of technology advancements are endless. This is the case most of the time for consumers as well. However, with the world at your fingertips 24/7, it's easy to feel like you always need to be connected — especially when starting a new job. This presents the question: how do you leave work at work when it follows you home every day in the form of a mobile device?

MEGHAN GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

ISTOCK

Step outside yourself

Take a moment to see how others may feel about your smartphone habits. Whether it's your friend, parent or child, no one likes the feeling that you're prioritizing your attention to your device over them. So drop the phone and focus your attention on what really matters in that moment.

Speak up

It's likely that the person contacting you in the evening or on weekends has no comprehension of how you spend your time outside of work. If there seems to be a common denominator when it comes to who's seeping into your "you" time, talk to them about it! Simply ask them to hold off on sending work-related emails during non-work hours unless it's truly urgent. Most people will understand.

Let go of the guilt

When you don't respond within a prompt time frame (for many people, that means immediately), you may feel like you're slacking. The truth is, unless you're being paid to be on the clock at all times, you're allowed to have work-free time.

Unchain

Out of sight, out of mind. When your smartphone is chained to you, it becomes a natural instinct to check notifications and to have a look-see every time it buzzes. When you come home from work, put it somewhere that is out of the reach of your arms and ears!

Learn to separate the importance of notifications

When you hear your phone go off, you likely go into a thought process that consists of: I wonder who that is? I wonder what it's about? I wonder if it's important? I wonder if I should check that? And so on. But not every alert is an urgent matter. Chances are, if it's something truly earth-shattering, the person trying to reach you will do so by calling.

Self-control

Often it's not necessarily work that's the problem; it's that you can't resist checking if you've missed anything. When you get home, make a conscious effort to realize that, for now, work notifications can wait.

My baby takes the morning train, and makes the most of the ride

Astute commute.
The trip to your office is a long one, but it's the wise worker who chooses to take advantage of this time

MEGHAN GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

When I accepted my summer internship, I was ecstatic! Yet, there was one big concern that hung over my head like a dark cloud: my commute for the next four months.

I realized my commute into the city would add up to 15 hours to my full-time job each week, consisting of a one-hour train ride and a half hour walk each way. I'm definitely not alone, though — tens of thousands of people commute to and from Canada's largest cities each day by train, bus and car.

Just one month into my summer job, I have already found a number of ways to be more productive during those precious hours of commuting rather than writing them off as lost time.

Whether your commute is temporary or long-term, using these five tips can help you make the most of your valuable time:

Don't be late

Unlike your friends and parents, trains and buses do not wait for you. Period. You may think that the extra 20 seconds you took to pack your lunch doesn't really matter, but it can mean the difference between catching your train or bus and being on time, or missing it and sheepishly coming in late. Give yourself extra time to ensure you don't have to tell your boss you missed your bus or train over and over again.

Make some phone calls

If you're like me, you probably put off long, meaningful conversations with loved ones too often because you're too busy running off to do something. Since you're not going anywhere (for a bit anyways), pick up the phone and have a chat! It will put a smile on your face, and on the face of the person on the other end. Keep your volume and conversation subject matter in check, though. Nobody wants to hear you screaming about your personal problems on the bus or train for an hour.

Read

Immerse yourself into a great book or magazine and time will fly by. If this isn't reason enough, you'll magically go into your own world despite being surrounded by 1,000 or so fellow commuters.

Get caught up

Living in a technology-driven world makes it easy to get things done without sitting at a desk.

Starting projects, reading the news, paying bills and making appointments are all things that need to get done. So why not do them before you even get home?

Free your mind

No cellphone, no music — nothing.

More sorrow for Jays' sore Morrow

MLB. Starting pitcher unable to shake discomfort in forearm as Braves go on attack and win in extra inning

Jays starter Brandon Morrow walks back to the mound after first baseman Edwin Encarnacion's relay throw sailed high and wide, leaving Atlanta catcher Brian McCann safe at first base in the first inning on Tuesday. DAVID COOPER/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

It didn't take long to realize there was something wrong with Brandon Morrow.

His velocity was down, his slider wasn't working and the opposing team was taking advantage. Through two laborious innings Morrow was tagged for four runs, two earned, before the Toronto Blue Jays yanked their starting pitcher.

The Braves then went to work on Toronto's bullpen, which gave up three home runs. Brian McCann hit a pair of homers — including a tie-breaking solo shot in the 10th inning — as Atlanta edged the Blue Jays 7-6 on Tuesday afternoon.

Morrow said his right forearm has been sore since his last appearance. There's no pain, just a lingering discomfort that hampered him on the mound.

"It wasn't explosive, the ball wasn't coming out of my hand really well," he said. "It was just like there wasn't anything in there."

Morrow's day was done after 47 mostly off-speed pitches. His fastball has averaged 93.6 m.p.h. this season according to FanGraphs, but dipped during the game to 91.

On Tuesday

Braves	Blue Jays

Morrow said he plans to let the forearm rest and still expects to make his next start Sunday in San Diego.

With Morrow gone, the Blue Jays turned to reliever Ramon Ortiz for three innings. Ortiz held on until giving up back-to-back homers by Evan Gattis and McCann that gave Atlanta a 6-4 lead.

The bullpen rebounded for Toronto (22-30) with scoreless innings from Aaron Loup, Brett Cecil and Steve Delabar. But in the 10th inning, McCann turned on the second pitch from Thad Weber (0-1) for his first multi-homer game of the season and the ninth of his career.

After the game, Weber was optioned to triple-A Buffalo, Ortiz was designated for assignment and the team announced closer Casey Janssen had been held out of the game with mild soreness in his shoulder.

French Open. Djokovic jonesing for career Grand Slam

Novak Djokovic does not try to hide his ambitions. He wants to win a French Open title more than anything.

Embarking on a bid to complete a career Grand Slam and fill the only glaring hole on his resumé, the No. 1-ranked Djokovic pulled out a tight first set en route to a 7-6 (5), 6-4, 7-5 victory Tuesday in the first round against David Goffin, a Belgian who was the surprise of Roland Garros a year ago.

"I love this Grand Slam," Djokovic said. "I really want to do well here."

The key moment came in the first-set tiebreaker, with the 58th-ranked Goffin serving at 5-all. After he faulted once, a fan yelled, "Allez, David!" The 22-year-old Goffin then proceeded to miss his second serve, too, for a double-fault that gave Djokovic a set point.

Djokovic lost to seven-time French Open champion Rafael Nadal in last year's final. That ended Djokovic's 27-match Grand Slam winning streak and, with it, his attempt to earn a fourth consecutive major championship.

Now Djokovic — who has won the Australian Open four times, and the U.S. Open and Wimbledon once each — said before the tournament began that a French Open win is "the No. 1 priority of my year."

"I really want to do well here. I have high hopes for myself, and there is no secret about it," he reiterated Tuesday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Whitfield's mixed emotions on return to mixed discipline

One foot out the door.
Golden boy triathlete from 2000 Olympics close to calling it a career

Olympic triathlon champion Simon Whitfield isn't ready to officially retire just yet.

The 38-year-old from Kingston said Tuesday that he considers himself "semi-retired," and there's just a "10 per cent" chance he'll return to full-time racing.

"I'm leaving the door open simply because I don't want to pull a Brett Favre and say I'm done and then come back," Whitfield said at a Toronto Triathlon Festival news conference. "Maybe I just haven't come to terms with saying 'Fully retired,' so I'm putting semi in front of it to give myself an out."

Simon Whitfield opened his fourth career Olympic competition as Canada's flag-bearer in London last summer but suffered a broken collarbone in a bike crash during the triathlon. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Whitfield said although he's currently training at less than 50 per cent, he could still decide to race. But where it would normally take him 12 weeks to prepare for a competition, Whitfield said he'd likely need between 16 and 20 weeks to ensure he's able to cover a triathlon's 1.5-kilometre swim, 40-kilometre bike ride and 10-kilometre run at a high level.

Trouble is, that would also mean being away from his wife, Jennie, and their two daughters, Pippa and Evelyn.

"My family is my priority now and spending more time with them," Whitfield said. "I know what it takes to be at that top level and I really didn't like when people downplayed how much it took, so now for me to do both is very difficult."

"If I can find a place where I can balance it then I'll do that. Right now I can't so I'm not going to."

Wrestling leader confident of Olympic return

As the man leading wrestling's charge to preserve its Olympic status, Nenad Lalovic believes he's done what it takes.

Three months after wrestling was surprisingly dropped from the 2020 Games, Lalovic will present a new-look sport and revamped governing body to the IOC on Wednesday in a bid to keep its Olympic place.

"I'm confident," Lalovic, the new president of international federation FILA, said Tuesday. "A lot of people say to me, 'Oh, you won't face any problem here,' but we'll see. We did everything we could. Nothing else was possible."

Wrestling is competing against a combined baseball-softball bid, karate, roller sports, sport climbing, squash, wakeboarding and the Chinese martial art of wushu for a single opening on the 2020 lineup.

Soak up the 2014 Kia Sorento

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

2014 Kia Sorento

- Type. Four-door, front- /all-wheel-drive wagon
- Engines (hp). 2.4-litre DOHC I4 (191); 3.3-litre DOHC V6 (290)
- Transmissions. Six-speed automatic
- Base price (incl. destination) $28,500

Design

For 2014, the Georgia-built Sorento receives a minor nose tweak, including the ubiquitous mesh-style grille, updated headlights and optional fog lights, plus new tail light lenses. Otherwise the silhouette remains basically the same.

Under the hood lies a 3.3 litre V6

Fuel Economy

Interestingly, estimated four-cylinder fuel economy is 10.4 l/100 km in the city and 7.1 on the highway (two-wheel-drive), which is fairly close to the V6's 11.4/8.0 rating. That points to the extra work the four-cylinder has to do to lug the Sorento around.

Engine

Under the hood, the 191-horsepower 2.4-litre four-cylinder with direct injection (fuel is sprayed under very high pressure directly into the combustion chambers instead of the intake manifold) carries on with its base-engine duties.

Review. New Sorento will satisfy as its DNA has been upgraded

wheelbasemedia.com

The new 2014 Kia Sorento really depends on how you look at it, or more correctly, where you look at it.

Kia's current design renaissance encompasses the street-wise Soul and Sportage wagons as well as the Optima and Rio sedans. You can also place the current-generation Sorento that was launched for 2011 on that list. The lines are so right on the money in terms of contemporary style and carrying capacity that there was no point in monkeying around with the mid-sized wagon's looks.

Surprisingly, however, just about every other part of the Sorento's DNA has been altered, redesigned, or otherwise enhanced, kind of like when Peter Parker was bitten by the spider to become Spider-Man. Same kid on the outside, but better reflexes and more power. For 2014, Kia has mounted the Sorento on a platform that's identical to that of parent Hyundai's five-passenger Santa Fe Sport. Kia claims the new structure is stiffer than the 2013 version; attached to that is a stouter sub-frame that holds the powertrain more firmly.

There's also a new independent front suspension, while a more compact rear suspension aids interior space and restricts noise and vibrations from entering the cabin.

The Sorento's hydraulic power-steering system has been exchanged for a more efficient electric unit that features Comfort, Normal and Sport settings, depending on your desired level of steering firmness.

Kia's design team also took care of business on the inside, installing a new instrument panel and centre control stack with easier-to-find buttons and knobs. As before, Sorento can accommodate up to seven passengers with the optional third-row seat, but there's precious little legroom in back and equally scarce stowage room when loaded to the max with passengers. There is a solution if a more comfy back row is a must, but it requires visiting your Hyundai dealer to scope out the extended-wheelbase version of the Santa Fe.

The trunk, with the seats folded down, offers an amazing storage space.

For 2014, Kia is holding firm to the same LX, EX and SX trim levels. At the top, the SX model does its luxury best to coddle passengers with a wood-trimmed interior with ventilated soft leather-covered seats on the inside, while self-leveling headlights and exclusive 19-inch wheels are installed outside.

As for options, the tricks up the Sorento's sleeve include a power liftgate, panoramic sunroof, advanced voice-activated communications, infotainment and navigation controls (incorporating an eight-inch touchscreen) and a blind-spot monitoring system that constantly tracks vehicles in the immediate vicinity and issues an audible and visual alert should any get too close.

The good and bad guys of insurance

Autopilot. Heroes and villains: A big money fraudster who bit off too much and those kind people who left letters on my car

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

There's been lots of talk recently about the high cost of vehicle insurance. A report by the Fraser Institute concluded that provinces with "government insurance monopolies" tend to have higher premiums than provinces with "private sector, competitive markets."

But Ontario has the highest premiums of them all — higher than provinces with so-called insurance monopolies. If the Ontario NDP gets its way, the Ontario Liberal Government will include some insurance cost reform in its soon-to-be-tabled Budget.

Through the Insurance Bureau of Canada (IBC) the private insurers have just mounted a public campaign, to explain the Ontario discrepancy. Its argument, backed by the Fraser Report, is that most of the money is going to the wrong places — hidden legal fees, fraud, and excessive assessments by for-profit medical facilities.

One criminal outfit called "Project 92" was estimated to bill $25 million in fraudulent insurance claims. Its ringleader, now behind bars, staged fake accidents and had corrupt accomplices in every link of the repair and medical chain, who over-billed for everything.

When vehicles come together in noisy and expensive ways, it's not always the worst in people that shows up; sometimes it's the best. At least that's been my experience.

Over the years I've had three parked cars that have been hit by somebody when I wasn't around, and in every instance, they left a note, and eventually made proper restitution.

Mechanical chivalry

"When vehicles come together in noisy and expensive ways, it's not always the worst in people that shows up; sometimes it's the best."

The most memorable of these occasions was the latest one, involving the guy that delivers our morning paper in his old van. I guess on that fateful morning he jumped out of his van without first putting it into "park." It went down the street, driverless, first careening off our Mazda6, then settling into a Hyundai Sonata owned by my neighbour Tim.

When Tim and I went out in the morning, we both found notes on our cars, just listing a phone number to call about the damage. My left mirror was gone, and a fender was creased. Tim's car was a bit worse.

I eventually got hold of his teenage son, who explained that his father, being a recent immigrant, couldn't speak English too well. Both of them would come around on Saturday to make arrangements. I offered to call my insurance company. Maybe he just could pay the deductible? I was a bit worried that his body shop of choice might not do the job as properly as my body shop of choice.

He said I should not worry at all about getting my car fixed, or getting it fixed properly, because his father was a very honest man. I distinctly remember how he said all this. He said it slow and with no inflection, like he wasn't trying to sell me anything, just stating a fact.

The cars were fixed promptly and properly. I can't imagine how many days delivering newspapers it took to pay a body shop to fix both cars that way, but probably a few.

Car insurance is pricey, but common decency? That's priceless. ISTOCK

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
There is no point in trying to avoid obligations. Fortunately, what you have to do over the next few days won't be as difficult as you fear. Once you start, you may enjoy it.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You're avoiding a showdown with someone you love. It may be understandable but it's not very smart. The sooner you let each other know why you are so angry, the sooner the healing process can begin.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Your luck is about to turn for the better and before you know it good things will be coming at you from all directions. Good people too. You will attract just the right person at just the right time.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Aim to be a bit more tactful when dealing with colleagues. In a matter of days you will have a clearer picture of what needs to be done to turn a loss into a gain but you don't have to be pushy about it.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Make sure your long-term plans are practical. If you have not thought them through properly, they could fall short of expectations. Know your goals and have a Plan B ready.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You think too much and because of that, you worry too much as well. The message of the stars is that you should stop analyzing each and every detail. Go with the flow.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You may be yearning for things you are unlikely to get. But over the next two days a more realistic attitude will set in. Then, remarkably, you will find that what you desire suddenly comes easily to you.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Don't get so caught up in the social whirl today that you fail to notice a career opportunity of some kind. In a matter of weeks, you could move several rungs up the ladder of success.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You don't have time to wallow in negativity — there are too many interesting things going on in the world. One special person needs help though. Spare them an hour of your time and get them smiling.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Do something that makes you feel good about yourself today. Your problems may seem huge but in reality they can't hurt you in the slightest. What is it that makes you feel glad to be alive? Do it some more.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Life will offer you opportunities but it is up to you whether or not you do anything with them. An interesting offer will come your way over the next few days. Make it your own.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Fame and fortune can be yours if you want them but do you? As a Pisces, you may prefer to keep a low profile, but if so that's a shame as you have so much to offer. SALLY BROMPTON
